

Todd Hochberg is a documentary photographer. His Touching Souls Bereavement Photography has supported parents experiencing perinatal loss, as they say goodbye to their babies, since 1997. In conjunction with hospital bereavement programs, palliative care programs, hospices and directly with individuals, he makes documentary photographs for families struggling with a loved one's serious illness or grieving the death of a loved one. The images serve as touchstones for feelings and memories pertaining to deep significant relationships and spiritual connections some of which may flourish in the intimacy of the last days or months of life. Todd's work is published widely and he presents to a variety of professional groups nationally and locally.

This interactive workshop session will describe and demonstrate approaches and techniques in the taking of bereavement photographs for caregivers involved in this practice. In addition to participant observation and participation in making photographs in mock-bereavement scenarios set up in the classroom, slide examples will be shown and tips on communication with parents provided. Issues relative to protocol and institutional structure will be discussed. Participants will learn the importance of being supportively present while taking pictures and the value of photographs to bereaved families.
