"Unflinching in their realism, yet transcendent in their intent, Hochberg's visual meditations on perinatal loss do more than chronicle a tragic death. They also affirm a life, conferring full personhood on both his tiny subjects and those who hold them in their arms and hearts. Hochberg uses his lens to preserve a compelling, and often touchingly beautiful moment in the human drama when birth and death coincide. The resulting image extends the memory of an abbreviated life, at the same time that it deepens the humanity of those who view it. As eloquently as any words, these unique photographs speak to the soul of love and loss, and facilitate a moving reconstruction of their meaning."
